UraniumSA leach trial

UraniumSA has set a mid year target to complete draft documentation for approval of a leach trial at uranium project southwest of Whyalla.

UraniumSA managing director Russel Bluck claims work on documentation for a uranium ISR field leach trial at the Blackbush Prospect within the main Mullaquana project has commenced.

Mr Bluck said three core holes have been drilled to provide samples for laboratory determinations and initial information on Blackbush's mineralogy, porosity, permeability and metallurgy should be available in the coming June quarter.

"Subject to approvals, that should allow the trial to commence mid next year - 2011."

The company's drill program at Blackbush over the next six months includes drilling extensions to the inferred resource to increase the prospect's thickness and average grade.

UraniumSA also plans to initiate project-funding talks over the next six months to obtain the financial and technical resources required to commercialise Mullaquana.
